The interrelations of poet-patient and trainee-physician are examined in this essay. Of the English Romantic poets, John Keats is perhaps the brightest star. On the morning of 9 December, when Keats woke and vomited two cups of blood, he bled his patient, taking away eight further ounces of blood. Keats trained as an apothecary and a surgeon before deciding to be used to bleed patients), and bookkeeping; as he progressed he may.

poet-physician after Keats, had learned how to avoid an impossible dilemma, .. slippery grounds, threatened the patient of a fatal faux pas. To such damages.
